ABSTRACT

In July 1995, the American Association of Community College's International Services Office conducted a survey of 1,154 colleges to gather data on the colleges' involvement in international education programs and services. The study sought to determine the types of international education programs offered, enrollment, the status of program directors, services provided to international students, the level of involvement with international organizations and foreign countries, sources of funding, and respondents' views regarding future trends and current problems. Study findings, based on responses from 624 colleges, included the following: (1) 505 of the respondents indicated that they offered some type of international education program, with international curricula the most commonly cited type; (2) 43% had supported some type of international education program for over 10 years; (3) academic or business connections were reported for 143 countries; (4) 476 respondents reported enrolling international and immigrant students, while the total international/immigrant student enrollment was 167,572; (5) 61% had a staff or faculty member responsible for international programs, with 73% of these full-time; and (6) 20% had received government funds to help support their programs. Appendixes include the survey cover letter and instrument, a policy statement on international education, lists of survey respondents and international program directors, selected current readings on international education at community colleges, and a list of international education organizations in which community colleges participate. Preface

Although international education has been on the AACC agenda for at least 30 years, its relative significance has changed importantly in the last few years. The change has many causes. One is that local colleges have come to realize that the "community" identified in their mission statements no longer is confined to the limited geographical area they are charged to serve. Not only are local communities composed of growing numbers of immigrants whose culture and belief systems require understanding and regard, but also the economies of these communities are increasingly dependent on effective relationships with other countries. Further, the evolving structure of the workplace demands that teams of workers from different national and ethnic backgrounds perform harmoniously to achieve at a high level in order to be competitive. Also, the just application of human services and emergency assistance requires a degree of international sensitivity not demanded in the past.

The argument for international education programs exists on the human level, in economic terms, and on the civic plane.

In response to these national trends, the AACC has elevated the profile of international education organizationally and financially. The responsibility for international education issues is now housed in AACC's academic unit and supported by a full-time professional staff person. Further, as part of AACC's new effort to involve more of our member presidents as advisors to the AACC Board of Directors on central themes, we have created a Commission on International/Intercultural Services. The Commission has met three times at this writing. It has already identified a number of issues and activities that are designed to advance the purposes of international education in our national network of community colleges. Also, we have made strong efforts to broadcast activities, events, and initiatives related to international education in all of the Association's publications, the AACC World Wide Web home page, and through professional development programs.

Until this time, however, we have not had a clear grasp of the full sweep of activities in international education in which our colleges are involved. We have been working on the basis of vignettes, personal perceptions, and limited reports. The survey results reported in this monograph offer for the first time a detailed picture of our colleges' investment in international education, a picture that will aid the work of the Association in the years ahead. By intention, this survey collected broad information about these activities. Our plan is to follow up these results with more specific inquiries to collect additional information that will sharpen the picture considerably.

These are initial steps. We are committed to continued and more intensive efforts in international education in the future.

David R. Pierce, President and CEO

Executive Summary

In July 1995, AACC's International Services Office sent the entire network of its colleges and campuses (1,154), a questionnaire designed to gauge the broad directions of the colleges' involvement in international education programs and services. Six hundred twenty-four colleges responded—more than 53 percent. Only 15 percent of the colleges indicated they did not offer any sort of international experience.

Some of the key findings of the survey were:

- Over 80 percent of the 624 colleges that responded to the survey offer some type of international education program.
- 43 percent of the colleges have supported some type of international education program for over 10 years. 21 percent said they have offered international programs for 6 to 10 years, and 4 percent reported offering international programs for less than 1 year.
- The colleges have had some sort of academic or business connection to 143 countries.
- Approximately 80 percent of the colleges have international student and immigrant enrollment on their campuses. The numbers of international students per campus ranged from one to nearly 20,000.
- The states with the highest numbers of international student and immigrant enrollments are California (65,287), Florida (24,146), Washington (14,709), Virginia (11,389), and Texas (11,033).
- 64 percent of the colleges offer foreign language curricula.
- Approximately 63 percent offer English as a Second Language programs.
- 35 percent conduct study abroad and/or exchange opportunities for college faculty and/or students.
- 17 percent provide international training for local businesses.
- International contract training is conducted by over 12 percent of the colleges.
- 61 percent of the colleges have a staff and/or faculty member responsible for international education programs. Of this number, 73 percent are full-time, while 26 percent are employed part-time as international program directors.
- 20 percent of the colleges have received U.S. government funds to help support their programs; 14 percent said state governments had provided financial assistance; and 12 percent of the colleges indicated that private foundations had provided funds.
- Collaboration with other international education organizations was noted by nearly 35 percent of the colleges. The most frequently cited collaborative organizations were Youth for Understanding International Exchange (YFU), Sister Cities International (SCI), and People to People International (PTPI).

- Membership in international education organizations was noted by 25 percent of the colleges. The most frequently noted organizations were the American Council on International/Intercultural Education (ACIIE), Community Colleges for International Development (CCID), and NAFSA: Association of International Educators.

- 70 percent of the colleges reported their international programs would increase either dramatically or moderately within the next five years. 26 percent predicted they would remain the same. Only 4 percent speculated their programs would either decrease or dissolve.

Summary of International Programs

Analysis of Responses to Question 1

The survey's first question was structured to capture the scope of international programs offered on community college campuses. Over 80 percent, or 505 of all colleges responding, reported at least one international education program. The question also provided an opportunity for respondents to add other international programs that were not listed. Responses were extremely varied.

The 18 possible responses have been grouped into six broad categories for clarity of analysis:

1. Study abroad/exchange opportunities
2. International curricula
3. International community activities
4. Campus-based international activities
5. International business activities
6. Other international education programs

- Study abroad/exchange opportunities include faculty exchange, faculty study abroad, student exchange, and student study abroad.

  Nearly 40 percent reported involvement in these activities.

- International curricula include international distance learning, internationalizing curricula, English as a Second Language programs, and foreign language curricula.

  70 percent cited international curricula.

- International community activities are composed of international study tours, community international celebrations, and community foreign policy forums.

  43 percent reported international community activities.

- Campus-based international activities include international business centers, international meeting sponsors, and international training for local businesses.

  27 percent responded that they were active in campus-based international activities.

- International business activities consist of international consultation, project management abroad, international contract training, and international meeting attendance.

  23 percent reported conducting international business activities.

Ten Most Prevalent International Programs/Activities in Community Colleges

Foreign language curricula (64 percent)
English as a Second Language (63 percent)
Internationalizing curricula (40 percent)
Student study abroad programs (35 percent)
Community international celebrations (31 percent)
Faculty exchange (26 percent)
International study tours (24 percent)
Student exchange (19 percent)
Faculty study abroad programs (18 percent)
International meetings (18 percent)

Table 1.1 presents the ten most prevalent international programs/activities in community colleges. Other international education programs are listed in Table 1.2.

Study Abroad/Exchange Opportunities

Study abroad/exchange opportunities consist of the following programs:

- Faculty exchange
- Faculty study abroad
- Student exchange
- Student study abroad

Study abroad for both faculty and students is defined as community college students and faculty travelling to other countries on a college-sponsored program or under the auspices of an international study organization, such as the Council on International Educational Exchange (CIEE/Council) or the American Institute of Foreign Study (AIFS).

An exchange opportunity is a mutual international exchange of students and/or faculty with another institution of higher education in another country.

Of the colleges that responded to this category:

- 36 percent reported student study abroad programs.
- 26 percent offered faculty exchange programs.
- 19 percent offered student exchange programs.
- 18 percent reported faculty study abroad programs.

International Curricula

International Curricula consist of the following components:

- International distance learning
- Internationalizing curricula
- English as a Second Language (ESL) programs
- Foreign language curricula

Nearly 80 percent of the respondents indicated they offered at least one program in one of these four areas:

- 64 percent offered foreign language curricula.
- 63 percent offered ESL courses.
- 40 percent reported offering international curricula or that they were in the process of internationalizing their curricula. Among the courses reported were "Mathematics and Developing Countries" and "Local Cultures/Global Issues." Workshops for science and mathematics instructors on incorporating international components into their courses were also noted.
- 6 percent are involved with international distance learning either by means of satellite broadcasts or over the internet.

International Community Activities

International Community Activities include:

- International study tours
- Community international celebrations
- Community foreign policy forums

Of all respondents:

- 31 percent had organized or hosted international celebrations to recognize the diversity within their college community. Celebrations of Cinco de Mayo, Chinese New Year, and St. Patrick's Day are examples of the way colleges honor the diverse cultures of local residents.
- 24 percent indicated that they have offered international study tours, allowing administrators and faculty to participate in organized tours to learn about foreign systems of higher education.
- 9 percent offered foreign policy forums for their community. These forums took the form of public seminars, workshops, and lectures.

Campus-based International Activities are comprised of:

- International business centers
- International meeting sponsorship
- International training for local businesses

Of all respondents:

- 17 percent were involved with providing direct training to local businesses. Such training might include English language training for foreign nationals and foreign language training for American businesses.
- 10 percent reported maintaining a campus-based international business center to aid local businesses in accessing global markets. Center services might include workshops on import-export issues, information on international business law, or a resource library.
- 7 percent indicated they had been international meeting sponsors, including seminars and international teleconferences.

International Business Activities

International Business Activities consist of:

- International consultation
- Project management abroad
- International contract training
- International meeting attendance

Of the respondents:

- 18 percent reported participation in international conferences and business meetings.
- Over 12 percent provided international contract training to a foreign government, business or company, or an institution of higher education.
- Nearly 12 percent provided consultation in the form of services and advice to foreign enterprises. Included among these services were faculty in-service training and courses for business managers.
- Roughly 4 percent reported they had provided project management abroad.

Other International Education Programs

Table 1.2 compiles a representative cross-section of the numerous and varied responses to this part of Question 1. Among the most frequently cited activities were:

- Associate Degree programs in international fields, such as international studies, international business, and international trade.
- International student clubs or centers.
- Specialized orientation and mentoring programs for international students.
- Intercultural training for faculty and students.
- Opportunities for community members to expand their global awareness.
- Host services for international scholars and visitors.
- Technology transfer with foreign countries and local international businesses.
- Video courses produced in other languages.

Question 2

Does your college have international student and immigrant enrollment?

☐ Yes ☐ No

If yes, please indicate how many students are enrolled in the following categories:

International Students:

☐ J-1 Visas _____

☐ F-1 Visas _____

Immigrants:

☐ Legal permanent residents _____

☐ Non-residents _____

☐ Undocumented aliens _____

☐ Refugees. _____

☐ Other (specify) _____

Analysis of Distribution of International Student and Immigrant Enrollment by State

Table 2.1 reflects a state-by-state report on the total number of international students and immigrants in the colleges as well as the total number of legal permanent residents.

These data are reflective only of the numbers reported by the colleges. In many cases, data on the number of international students or immigrants at the colleges were unavailable because the colleges do not track them or the data were inaccessible to the respondent. These numbers, therefore, reflect a conservative estimate of the number of international students and immigrants on community college campuses.

For survey purposes, international students were divided into two categories:

- J-1 visas issued to exchange visitors
- F-1 visas issued to qualified students having residence in a foreign country who seek to enter the U.S. temporarily to pursue study

Immigrants were divided into the following categories:

- Legal permanent resident: A person who is not a citizen or national of the United States, but who has been admitted lawfully for permanent residence.
- Non-resident: A person lawfully admitted in the United States, but who does not intend to reside permanently in the country.
- Undocumented aliens: Those who are not citizens or nationals of the United States, who are residing in the United States unlawfully.
- Refugees: Those who flee to the United States to escape danger or persecution in their native countries.

Four hundred seventy-six (476) colleges, or over three-quarters of the responding colleges, indicated they had some type of international student and immigrant enrollment.

- Total reported international student and immigrant enrollment was 167,572.
- Legal permanent residents number 90,953.

Other visa categories were identified by responding colleges as well and included B-1 visas for temporary business visitors, B-2 visas for temporary visitors on a holiday, F-2 visas for the spouse or child of an international student, H-1 visas for temporary workers, and J-2 visas for the spouse or child of an exchange visitor.

Table 2.2 lists the colleges with the highest enrollments of international students and immigrants.

Distribution of International Student and Immigrant Enrollment

Nearly 80 percent of the responding colleges stated they had international student and immigrant enrollment on their campuses, but not all colleges reported a specific number of total enrollment or numbers for each of the international student and immigrant categories. Analysis of the data reflects only the numbers reported.

For those colleges that reported numbers for these categories, the data suggest that distribution of international student and immigrant enrollment was widespread across the United States.

- States reporting the highest numbers of international enrollment were: California, Florida, Washington, Virginia, and Texas.
- States reporting under 5 international students and immigrants were: Maine and Montana.
- States reporting no such enrollment included: South Dakota, Nevada, and Arkansas.

Many colleges indicated they enrolled foreign students and immigrants, but did not have specific numbers to report, either because the college did not track these numbers or the person completing the survey did not have access to this information.

- California noted the largest total with 65,287.
- Florida's international student and immigrant enrollment totalled 24,146.
- Washington reported a total of 14,709 international students and immigrants.
- Virginia reported a total of 11,389.
- Texas reported a total of 11,033 international students and immigrants.

Distribution of Legal Permanent Resident Enrollment

While nearly 80 percent of the responding colleges stated they had international student and immigrant enrollment on their campuses, not all colleges reported a specific number of total enrollment for legal permanent resident immigrants. Analysis of the data reflects only the numbers reported.

- States reporting the highest numbers of legal permanent resident enrollment were California, Florida, Maryland, Washington, and New York.
- States reporting no enrollment were Vermont, North Dakota, South Dakota, Wyoming, Nevada, Missouri, Rhode Island, Kentucky, and Arkansas.

- The 57 California colleges that responded to the survey reported a total of 30,697 legal permanent residents.
- The 15 Florida colleges that responded reported 17,981.
- The 7 Maryland colleges indicated a total legal permanent resident enrollment of 6,261.
- The 20 Washington colleges reported an enrollment of 6,204 legal permanent residents.
- The 27 New York colleges that responded reported a total of 5,071 legal permanent residents.

QUESTION 3

Does your college have a person responsible for international programs?

☐ Yes ☐ No

a. If yes, please complete the following or attach a business card:

Name: _____

Title: _____

Telephone: _____ Fax: _____

Internet: _____

☐ Full-time ☐ Part-time

b. Please identify the primary responsibilities of the international programs director:

i. _____

ii. _____

iii. _____

c. Number of years there has been an international programs director at your college:

☐ Less than 1 year ☐ 1–5 years ☐ 5–10 years ☐ Over 10 years

Employment Status of International Program Directors

Of the colleges that responded, 61 percent, or 381 of the colleges, reported that there was a person responsible for international education programs. Some colleges noted that this responsibility was shared among two or three faculty members. A listing of the primary responsibilities of the international program directors is detailed in Table 3.1 on page 20.

Of the 61 percent of colleges that have a person responsible for international education:

- Over 73 percent (241 colleges) indicated the person is a full-time employee.
- 26 percent (86 colleges) indicated part-time responsibility for international education programs.

An alphabetical listing of the responding colleges with names and addresses of international program directors is located in Appendix C. An alphabetical listing of the international program directors, with college and state, is presented in Appendix D.

Primary Responsibilities of Directors of International Education Programs

The most frequently cited primary responsibilities of international program directors were:

- Coordinating and assisting students with study abroad activities.
- Coordinating international activities with faculty and students.
- Internationalizing college curricula.
- Maintaining contact with the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization. Service (INS), and keeping updated on all INS regulations.
- Initiating overseas educational and business initiatives.
- Serving as a liaison and resource to the community and advocating the importance of international education.

Table 3.1 represents a compilation of the responses in this category. It does not list every response given from every college, nor does it suggest that each director has all of these responsibilities. The comprehensiveness and size of each college's program determines the range of responsibilities each director has.

Primary Responsibilities of Directors of International Education Programs

Administer international education budget
Administer tests
Advise international clubs

Number of Years Colleges Have Employed International Programs Director

This figure illustrates the number of years the director of international programs has been employed at the college in this capacity. The percentages include both full- and part-time employees.

Of the colleges that responded to this category:

- 38 percent indicated having a director of international programs for 1 to 5 years.
- 29 percent responded international program directors were employed for over 10 years.
- 24 percent reported they had an international education director for 6 to 10 years.
- Only 9 percent noted they employed directors for less than 1 year.

Question 4

How long has your college had an international program(s)?

☐ Less than 1 year ☐ 1–5 years ☐ 5–10 years ☐ Over 10 years

Number of Years Colleges Have Had International Programs

The results of this question show the following:

- 43 percent of the respondents indicated they had offered international education programs for over 10 years. These data suggest that in the early stages of development, international programs were managed by staff whose primary responsibilities were in other areas. Only 29 percent of the colleges reported employing an international programs director for over 10 years.
- 31 percent indicated they had international programs for the past 1 to 5 years.
- 21 percent reported having international education programs for 6 to 10 years.
- 4 percent reported offering international education programs for less than 1 year.

Question 5

Please check all services your college provides to international students and/or faculty.

- ☐ Separate admissions office
- ☐ Guidance and/or counseling services
- ☐ Staff person devoted exclusively to international issues
- ☐ Other (specify)_____

Services Provided to International Students and Faculty

Responses to this question show that a wide range of services are provided to international students and faculty on community college campuses. If colleges did not offer specialized services exclusively for international students and faculty, they generally noted that the needs of these students were handled by the admissions and guidance counselors who work with the entire student population.

- Nearly 68 percent of the respondents, or 405 colleges, reported they offer at least one type of special service for international students and faculty.
- 63 percent noted having guidance and counseling services for international students and faculty.
- Nearly 32 percent reported having a staff person exclusively assigned to coping with the needs of this group of students and faculty.
- Slightly over 14 percent indicated they had a separate admissions office to handle the unique needs of international students.

An alphabetical listing of additional services identified by the colleges is presented in Table 5.1 on page 25.

- Orientation programs
- Housing assistance
- Community outreach

Some of the least frequently noted services to international students and faculty noted were:

- Baggage storage
- Citizenship preparation
- Health insurance
- Employment counseling
- Translation Services

Question 6

Does your college work with any of the international organizations listed below? Please check the appropriate boxes.

- ☐ Sister Cities International
- ☐ People to People International
- ☐ American Institute for Foreign Study
- ☐ AFS Intercultural Programs
- ☐ Council on International Educational Exchange
- ☐ Business/Industry enterprise
- ☐ Youth for Understanding International Exchange

- ☐ International organized labor union
- ☐ Other (specify) _____

Community College Participation in International Organizations

The international organizations listed in this question represent the most common groups with which community colleges connect on international education matters.

- Nearly 35 percent, or 206 of the responding colleges, indicated they worked with some type of international organization.
- Over 15 percent reported contact with the Council on International Educational Exchange (CIEE/Council). The Council is an international exchange organization that develops and administers study, work, and travel programs for secondary, undergraduate, and graduate students and also for professionals. The Council actively encourages its members to develop student exchange programs.
- Over 14 percent reported working with Sister Cities International (SCI). SCI is an organization that exists to give the opportunity to people and their communities to make connections with other cities in other countries to foster communication and collaboration.
- Nearly 9 percent reported working with the American Institute for Foreign Study (AIFS). AIFS promotes global understanding through cultural exchange programs, where students, generally 15 to 18 years of age, live and study in other countries to learn about other cultures.
- 8 percent reported working with business and industry.
- 4 percent have worked with Youth for Understanding International Exchange (YFU). YFU is a nonprofit, educational organization dedicated to international understanding and world peace through exchange programs for primarily high school students in 40 countries.
- 3 percent have worked with independent foundations.
- 2 percent have worked with People to People International (PTPI). The goal of PTPI is to encourage international understanding and friendship through cultural and educational activities involving the exchange of ideas and experiences among people of diverse cultures.

- Only 0.2 percent reported working with international organized labor unions.

In addition, colleges noted many other international education organizations they have worked with in their international programs. An alphabetical list of these organizations is provided in Table 6.1 on page 29. Further information on these organizations may be found in Appendix F, which contains an alphabetical listing of international education organizations with which community colleges are affiliated.

Question 7

Please list the countries with which your college has worked in the past three years.

Community College Interaction with Other Countries

The word "worked" in this question was left unexplained to obtain the broadest scope of information possible. Interpretations include:

- Representing international students and faculty on campus via study abroad programs and exchanges.
- Hosting international visitors to campus.
- Offering student and faculty study abroad or exchange programs with other countries.
- Engaging in any international business venture.

The scope of community college involvement in other countries is wide. The greatest activity was reported in Western European countries, followed closely by Asian nations. North American contact was third.

- 143 countries (which include U.S., British, and French territories) were identified by the colleges as ones with which they have some working association.
- 133 colleges have worked with Japan.
- 131 colleges reported relationships with the United Kingdom.
- 98 colleges are working with Mexico.
- 80 colleges reported they have worked with the People's Republic of China.
- 78 colleges have worked with Germany.
- 73 colleges have worked with France.
- 69 colleges have some working relationship with Russia.
- 56 colleges have worked with South Korea.
- 47 colleges have worked with Canada.

A small number of colleges reported relationships with:

- Albania, Botswana, Fiji, Iceland, Iran, Mongolia, Portugal, and Uzbekistan.

Table 7.1 identifies the most frequently mentioned countries. Table 7.2 lists in alphabetical order every country identified in response to Question 7. It also notes the frequency with which the countries were listed by the colleges.

Question 8

Please indicate the sources of outside funding your international activities have received in the past five years, including funding for programs, students, administrators, and other activities.

Outside Funding Sources for International Education Programs

Over 36 percent, or 216 of the colleges, that responded to Question 8 indicated they had been successful in procuring some type of outside funding for their international education programs.

Of the colleges that responded to this category:

- Nearly 20 percent reported they have been most successful obtaining outside funding from the federal government.
- 14 percent reported they had received funding from state governments.
- 12 percent reported they received financial support from independent foundations.
- 12 percent identified foreign countries as sources of funding for international education programs.
- Roughly 10 percent reporting receiving funding from business and industry.
- Only 0.2 percent reported obtaining funding from international organized labor unions.

In addition, several colleges listed other outside sources from which they had procured funding for international programs. Some of these include college foundations, the local community, and rotary clubs.

A listing of the other sources of outside funding identified by the responding colleges is presented in Table 8.1.

Other Sources of Outside Funding for International Activities

Table 8.1 offers an alphabetical compilation of the survey responses to the "Other" category in Question 8. It represents the most frequently listed organizations, but does not list every response given from every college.

Some of the responses most frequently noted were:

- Scholarships from business and industry
- Community organizations (such as local womens' groups)
- Targeted fundraising
- Community donations from various sources such as churches and restaurants

Less frequently cited sources were:

- Inter-American Development Bank (IADB)
- Rotary Club
- The College Board
- United States Department of Defense

Question 9

Is your college a member of any of the following international education organizations?

- ☐ American Council on International/ Intercultural Education (ACIIE)
- ☐ Community Colleges for International Development (CCID)
- ☐ NAFSA: Association of International Educators
- ☐ Alliance for International, Educational, and Cultural Exchange (Alliance)
- ☐ Council on International Educational Exchange (CIEE/Council)
- ☐ State and/or regional international education organization or consortium
- ☐ Other (specify) _____

Community College Membership in International Education Organizations

More than 46 percent, or 278 of the colleges, that responded to Question 9 reported membership in some type of international education organization.

Of the colleges that responded to this category:

- 36 percent noted they were members of NAFSA: Association of International Educators.
- 19 percent reported membership in a state or regional international education organization or consortium.
- Nearly 15 percent reported they were members of the American Council of International/Intercultural Education (ACIIE).
- Nearly 13 percent reported they were members of Community Colleges for International Development (CCID).
- Nearly 8 percent of the colleges that identified membership in ACIIE and CCID were members of both organizations.
- Roughly 10 percent said they were members of the Council on International Educational Exchange (CIEE/ Council).
- 1 percent noted membership in the Alliance for International, Educational, and Cultural Exchange (Alliance).

Several other international education organizations were noted as well. An alphabetical list of these is presented in Table 9.1 on page 36.

Question 10

For the next five years, do you expect your international programs to:

- ☐ Increase dramatically
- ☐ Increase moderately
- ☐ Remain the same
- ☐ Decrease somewhat
- ☐ Dissolve

Future Trends of International Programs

Responses to this question suggest a growing significance for international education in community colleges. Results show:

- 70 percent (340 colleges) indicated they expected their international programs to increase either dramatically or moderately in the next five years.
- 26 percent (130 colleges) indicated their international programs would remain the same.
- 2 percent (9 colleges) reported they expected their programs would decrease.
- 2 percent (10 colleges) noted they expected their programs to dissolve completely.

Question 11

List the two most significant problems/issues involving international education at your college.

a. _____

b. _____

Most Significant Challenges Facing International Education Programs

The respondents identified a number of specific concerns for their programs. Among them were: lack of funding for international education programs, financial aid for students to study abroad, high cost of tuition for international students, travel for administrators/staff, and the high cost of study abroad.

- Over 32 percent of the colleges cited financial difficulties.
- Over 11 percent reported difficulty staffing international programs, including a lack of personnel to run programs and lack of adequately trained personnel.
- 9 percent reported that advocating the importance of international education among trustees, administration, faculty, students, and the community was a challenge.
- Over 5 percent indicated that housing international students was an important issue for them. For many colleges both the lack of campus housing and host family housing was significant.
- Nearly 5 percent noted cross-cultural differences as a significant problem, including culture shock, lack of adequate English language skills, poor communication between American and international students, and the lack of a culturally diverse community.
- 3 percent reported that there was little time to plan, implement, and manage international education programs. A lack of faculty release time to run these programs is included in this response.
- 2 percent reported having difficulties processing visas including: complications with the Immigration and Naturalization Service (INS), translation of visa documents, and difficulties getting visa applications approved by the native countries.
- Nearly 2 percent reported difficulty recruiting international students as a problem.

Other lesser noted problems and issues were:

- Difficulty publicizing programs
- Lack of institutional space
- Weak coordination with all relevant college departments
- Unspecific definition of an international program
- Lack of a culturally diverse community

Table 11.1 on page 39 indicates the most significant challenges facing international education programs.

Question 12

What have we forgotten to ask?

a. _____

b. _____

Summary of Question 12

This question was designed to gain insight into what other key questions might be asked in future surveys to further illuminate the place of international education in community colleges.

The most frequently listed questions were:

- What types of AACC support could be extended for international education?
- What have been the benefits of international programs to campuses and their communities?
- What are the sources of grant monies for international education?
- Does your college include international and intercultural education in your mission statement?
- What is the level of institutional commitment for international education?
- How can communication be fostered among community colleges, international organizations, and the rest of the world? Can this connection be created on the internet in collaboration with international partners? How can one establish and maintain international activities between institutions and communities most effectively?

Appendix A

National Survey Cover Letter and Survey Instrument

July 7, 1995

Dear Colleague:

Please forgive the generic greeting. Our inability to address you personally helps explain the purpose of the enclosed questionnaire.

The apparent rapid growth and extensive range of international programs in community colleges has outpaced our information about them. Every index we have suggests that there is a great deal more going on in our colleges than we have specific information about. The result is AACC's efforts to inform the Congress, federal agencies, our counterparts in other higher education associations, interested colleges, and others are inadequate. We do not have an accurate national perspective on how community colleges have responded to the compelling local, national, and international circumstances that are influencing the expansion of international education.

Please help us produce a full picture of community college participation in this arena by completing the enclosed questionnaire and returning it to us in the enclosed, preposted envelope. You may also fax it to us at (202) 833-2467. As you can see by our questions, our interests are for general information initially. Once we have a good grasp of what is happening generally, we may return to ask you more specific questions about one area or another.

If another person at your college is directly responsible for international education, we would appreciate it if you would forward these materials. Also, if you have any questions or comments about this survey, please call Audree Chase at extension 233.

Please return the survey to us either by fax or in the enclosed, preposted envelope by Friday, August 4, 1995.

Thanks very much for your time.

Sincerely,

James R. Mahoney
Director of Academic, Student, and International Services

AACC Policy Statement on International Education

The interdependence of the peoples and nations of the world is a dominant factor and an expanding dimension of Twentieth Century life. Education for international/intercultural understanding has thus become imperative for Americans. The urgency of world issues confronting the United States increases the need for an internationally aware and competent citizenry, able to understand and function within the diversity of cultures and systems both within and beyond our national boundaries.

To help Americans achieve this competence and awareness, international education must receive renewed emphasis. The term international education encompasses a number of educational activities, most commonly including the following: an overall curriculum with global dimensions; foreign language programs; cultural and ethnic studies; study abroad programs; foreign students on U.S. campuses; faculty exchange programs; community forums on foreign policy issues; and the provision of technical assistance to other countries.

Community colleges are in a strategically strong position to undertake this challenge. They constitute a widely dispersed network committed to accessibility and service to the local community. Their students reflect the social, economic, ethnic, and occupational diversity of American society. Moreover, for many of the students, the community college will provide their only college-level education.

Therefore, the American Association of Community Colleges encourages community, technical, and junior colleges to acknowledge and support the value of the international dimension within the total institutional program.

AACC recognizes the need for providing appropriate support services within its capabilities and structures to assist in the development of international and intercultural education in community, technical, and junior colleges.

The Association recognizes and accepts the responsibility to provide leadership in interpreting and supporting the role of two-year community-based institutions in international education.

Appendix E

Selected Current Readings on International Education at Community Colleges

American Council on Education. (1995). Educating Americans for a World in Flux: Ten Ground Rules for Internationalizing Higher Education. Washington, D.C.: American Council on Education (ACE). 16 pages. This report is based on the findings of ACE's Commission on International Education and details recommendations of the commission to strengthen and enhance international education programs at institutes of higher education.

Bakke, A. and Tharp, B., Eds. (1994). Building the Global Community: The Next Step. Report of a conference sponsored by the American Council on International/ Intercultural Education and the Stanley Foundation. Muscatine, Iowa: Stanley Foundation. 32 pages. (ERIC Document Reproduction Service No. ED 383 359). This document provides an overview of the discussions and conclusions reached by participants during the conference. It describes the role of community colleges in international and intercultural education and offers strategies to ensure that viable global education programs are established nationwide.

Burn, B., et. al., Eds. (1992, December). Program Review of Study Abroad. Tallahassee, Florida: State University System of Florida. 124 pages. (ERIC Document Reproduction Service No. ED 355 893). This review describes the 1992 review of study abroad programs at the nine campuses in the Florida State University system. It is based on site visits to three of the universities, interviews with personnel from the other six institutions, and self-studies provided by all the institutions.

Campion, W. J. and Bostic, D., Eds. (1993, July). Manual for Building an International Education Program in the Community College. Ocala, Florida: Central Florida Community College. 155 pages. (ERIC Document Reproduction Service No. ED 361 013). This handbook provides descriptions of procedures and sample forms utilized in the establishment of an Office of International Education at Central Florida Community College.

Cassara, B., Ed. (1991). Adult Education in a Multicultural Society. Routledge Series on the Theory and Practice of Adult Education in North America. New York, New York: Routledge. 236 pages. ISBN: 0-415-03644-5. (ERIC Document Reproduction Service No. ED 384 765). In this book adult educators and policymakers focus on the dimensions of the problem of multicultural education in the United States and innovative approaches to multicultural education practice and research.

Chaifetz, M., Ed. (1992). A Manual on Developing an International Work Program: The Nassau Community College London Retailing Co-op Model. New York, New York: Council on International Educational Exchange. 43 pages. ISBN: 1-882036-09-3. (ERIC Document Reproduction Service No. ED 357 198). This booklet demonstrates how to develop an international cooperative education program based on the example of Nassau Community College's London Retailing Co-op program.

Echternacht, L., Ed. (1991). A Global Look at Business Education. National Business Education Yearbook, No. 29. Reston, Virginia: National Business Education Association. 196 pages. ISBN: 0-933964-35-8. (ERIC Document Reproduction Service No. ED 334 432). Selected experts write on issues concerning business education and the international scene. The chapters are organized into four parts — "Global Perspectives in Business Education," "Developing an International Business Education Program," "Internationalizing Business Education Programs," and "Selected Foreign Business Education Programs."

Eisenberg, D. U., Ed. (1992). The Future of Foreign Language Education at Community, Technical, and Junior Colleges. Washington, D.C.: American Association of Community Colleges, Special Report No. 1. 95 pages. ISBN: 0-87117-248-8. This monograph challenges the nation's community colleges to make the study of foreign language a priority. It includes the AACC Board-approved policy statement and five papers on such key foreign language topics as proficiency goals, use of technology, foreign language instruction across the curriculum, and articulation.

Eisenberg, D. U., Mahoney, J. R., and Labib, N., Eds. (1992). Improving Foreign Language Education at Community Colleges. Washington, D.C.: American Association of Community Colleges, Special Report No. 5. 76 pages. ISBN: 0-87117-274-7. This monograph contains case study reports from the 15 community colleges that participated in the first year of AACC's Improving Foreign Language Education at Community Colleges project. Special topic papers on such key issues in foreign language education as teaching for proficiency, teaching Spanish to Hispanic bilinguals, and using native speakers to supplement classroom learning.

Eisenberg, D. U., Mahoney, J. R., and Labib, N., Eds. (1995). Advancing Foreign Language Education at Community Colleges. Washington, D.C.: American Association of Community Colleges, Special Report No.

7. 80 pages. ISBN: 0-87117-284-4. This monograph contains case histories of 21 colleges that participated in the second year of AACC's Improving Foreign Language Education at Community Colleges project. The case histories demonstrate model approaches to strengthening and enhancing foreign language education.

Falcetta, F. M., Ed. (1993, Summer). "Why International?" Community Services Catalyst, v. 23, no. 3. Pages 27-29. ISBN: 0739-9227. (ERIC Document Reproduction Service No. ED 489 859). This article discusses the benefits of international programs at community colleges based on the experience of Middlesex Community College in Bedford, Massachusetts.

Florida State Department of Education. (1991). Directory of International Education Resources in Florida. Tallahassee, Florida: Office of International Education. 106 pages. (ERIC Document Reproduction Service No. ED 371 986). This directory highlights international programs and activities found in Florida's public schools, community colleges, universities, state agencies, and international associations.

Franco, R. W. and Shimabukuro, J. N., Eds. (1992). Beyond the Classroom: International Education and the Community College. Volume I: Internationalizing the Curriculum with an Asian-Pacific Emphasis. Honolulu, Hawai'i: University of Hawai'i/Kapi'olani Community College. 146 pages. (ERIC Document Reproduction Service No. ED 372 776). Volume I in this series highlights seven different strategies for integrating an Asian-Pacific emphasis in the curriculum.
